

Simona Kragh graduated from the University of South Carolina in August 2008 with a dissertation entitled The President, the Press, and Public Approval: Interactions and Media Management from Harry S. Truman to George W. Bush. She completed all academic coursework, up to a BA in Political Science (April 1994), in Milan, Italy. At the same time, she obtained a nursing degree and served as an Army nurse and First Aid instructor for several years. In 1997, she started her graduate education at Marquette University Milwaukee, WI, where she obtained a Master's Degree in Political Science (May 1999) and one in Journalism (May 2001).

SK's primary fields of interest are American Politics and International Relations, with a specific emphasis on the role of the media in American domestic and foreign policy.

SK has served as a research and teaching assistant at the University of South Carolina, where she also taught her own courses in US National Security Policy and International Relations. In other institutions she has been an adjunct instructor teaching Italian grammar and United States Government. She is currently teaching Introduction to International Relations and Politics and Government at Midlands Technical College, Columbia, SC.
